My Last Day by Joyce Rupp

A blip in the expanding universe, a wink of the awakened eye, a thin wisp of passing cloud, one in-breath, one out-breath.

The sojourn on this planet, whether a day or ninety years, quick as a lizard's tongue we're here, we're gone.

But, oh, if that brief piece of life ripens with kindheartedness, this momentary stay becomes a transforming, enduring light.

To live each passing day as if the last, to place each trouble in perspective, to bow to what seeks more acceptance, to stretch toward what love requests.

Inquisitive, open, tender, grateful, united as kin with pebble and partridge, embracing the gift of human encounters, cherishing every touch of the soul.
